

“Honey, I Shrunk My Tongue”

Vaishali Narkar and Sanjeev Khandekar

2024

www.vaishaliandsanjeev.com

“Honey, I Shrunk My Tongue”

This is a site specific installation of ceramic objects. One or many. All depends on the dimensions of the site. The object is a tongue.

Tongues of various sizes, single and many, individual and a multitude of them. Sometimes just one small piece, sometimes several small pieces together forming another object. Layers of symbols woven together. A kind of visual poem installed in space. A kind of language in making or an abstract process of deciphering a riddle of language.

Tongue is a mysterious organ every one of us has. Birds and animals, reptiles and insects, all have it. It is placed in the mouth entrusted with various tasks and functions. From taste to sound and from lust to greed, from ascetic denial to divine acceptance and representation of life to death, tongue remains one of the most versatile organs, a voice, a medium, and an agency itself. Its wiggle and squirm, turn, twist, and thresh each action says more than what is seen or heard.

‘Tongue, therefore, represents good & bad, ugly and beautiful, god and devil all together’ — tells the opening tale of the famous Aesop’s Fables.

Artist’s brush, writer’s pen, musician’s tunes, or the sensitive strings of his/her instrument... these are nothing but tongues.

Tongue is a word. Tongue is a language. Tongue needs freedom. Tongue is the free voice of a democratic society.

In one of his beautiful poems titled ‘Tongue’, John Berger says:

The tongue

is the spine’s first leaf forests of language surround it

Like a mole

the tongue

burrows through the earth of speech

Like a bird

the tongue

flies in arcs of the written word

The tongue is tethered and alone in its mouth.

Our installation(s), called ‘Honey, I Shrunk My Tongue’, is a work that provokes a journey to understand our own tongue, singularly and collectively.

Tongue has infinite possibilities.

Title: Untitled

Medium: Glazed Stoneware, Glazed and Unglazed Terracotta, Oxidation Reduction, Wood, Glass, Mirror, Metal Wire

Size: 108 x 72 inches

Year: 2024

Title: Untitled

Medium: Glazed Stoneware, Glazed and Unglazed Terracotta, Oxidation Reduction, Wood, Glass, Mirror, Metal, patina, light.

Size: 60 x 124 inches

Year 2024